Description:

Book Description In the same tradition as such bestselling authors as Jack Kornfield and Sharon Salzberg, Insight Meditation teacher Tara Brach has cultivated one of the largest and most active Buddhist meditation communities in the Eastern United States. With Radical Self-Acceptance, this gifted guide brings her enthusiasm and depth of experience to a wide new arena of listeners for the first time.

"Imagine what it would be like to be without anxiety about your imperfections", begins Brach. Employing her skills in two worlds, this clinical psychologist and meditation instructor takes on what she considers to be the most difficult -- and pervasive -- challenge to Westerners today: the suffering caused by our feelings of unworthiness and deficiency. Here, Brach teaches the specific practices we need to become more mindful and compassionate toward the "unforgivable" parts within ourselves -- and how to free ourselves from "the prison of shame and self-aversion". Practical and supportive, Radical Self-Acceptance marks the debut of one of the most capable new voices today on the marriage between Eastern meditation and Western psychology. -- This text refers to an out of print or unavailable edition of this title.

About the Author Tara Brach is the founder and senior teacher of the Insight Meditation Community of Washington, D.C. She is a practicing clinical psychologist, a lay Buddhist priest, and the author of In the Shadow of the Buddha.

And the best part is that everyone can relate to everyone else's "stuff" in the class, regardless of who is in the class There is a feeling of acceptance that grows naturally of yourself simply from seeing that we all have similar struggles, and that our "deep, dark secrets" aren't really that dark or abnormal. "Radical Self Acceptance" was suggested to me by a psychiatrist friend. The results for me have been staggering in a few short months I fully eliminated many negative 'mental tapes' with little or no recurrence over the past year+. And, it is getting stronger as time passes.
