LISTENING IN SLAIn second language acquisition (SLA) research, it is the 'linguistic environment' that serves as the stage for SLA. This environment " the speakers of the target language and their speech to the L2 learners " provides linguistic input in the form of listening opportunities embedded in social and academic situations. In his 'input hypothesis', Krashen says further development from the learner's current stage of language knowledge can only be achieved by the learner 'comprehending' language that contains linguistic items (lexis, syntax, morphology) at a level slightly above the learner's current knowledge (i + 1). Krashen claimed that comprehension is necessary in order for input to become 'intake'
