The new edition of Bevens' Models of Contextual Theology (first issued in 1992) is to be welcomed: partially because contextual theology is an area that deserves the attention of all conscientious theologians, but also because it smoothes over some of the problems with the first edition. After a couple chapters outlining the task, he gives a detailed account of the six models he sees in the field: translation, anthropological, praxis, synthetic, transcendental, and countercultural.
