

open-air chapel adds to the charm of the whole. So ended the visit to this wonderful place of healing, enshrined as it is in amazing beauty, and the very kind hospitality extended to the party by Sir Geoffrey Todd, the Matron, Miss Schofield, and the nursing staff—will long be remembered with gratitude.

Warm Thanks are due.

On the unqualified success of the three days' course arranged for Secretaries and Treasurers of the Leagues and Associations affiliated to the National Council of Nurses, a debt of gratitude is due to the Executive Secretary, Miss F. Rowe, and for the most generous hospitality extended by the Matrons and Governors of the Hospitals. for the unstinted labour on behalf of the very important work.

"Great Ormond Street" 1852—1952.*

By Thomas Twistington Higgins, O.B.E., F.R.C.S.
(Senior Surgeon at Gt. Ormond Street Hospital).

MR. T. T. HIGGINS has written a most charming and interesting little book to mark the first Centenary of Great Ormond Street Hospital. It contains a fascinating cavalcade of stirring events and famous personalities who guided the destiny of a little ten-bedded hospital from 1852 down through 100 years to the present imposing and world-famous Children's hospital of over 450 beds—so well known today.

Readers who are interested in courageous people of vision, determination and ceaseless activity should read the book in order to remind themselves that Britain still produces men and women of the finest character and calibre; people who are willing and anxious to work hard in order to "put the child first and always"; in order that our country shall be peopled with strong, healthy adults, sound in wind and limb.

Many stirring pen-portraits are drawn of those men and women; doctors, nurses, chairmen and others, whose dedicated lives glow brightly down the Hall of Fame of Great Ormond Street Hospital. These lives stir the imagination of those lovers of history and historic personalities.

Mr. Thomas Twistington Higgins who is the Senior Surgeon of the Children's Hospital deserves congratulations on his fine effort and for so generously declining to receive any royalties from the book. Indeed, Great Ormond Street Hospital is fortunate in its generous and noble friends and in its high-minded and loyal staff.

By Various Authors. (Edited by Alan Moncrieff.)

THIS IS THE FIFTH EDITION of this excellent textbook on the Nursing and Diseases of Children. Each division of the book is written by a Medical or Nursing expert, and is, therefore, right up to date. It is a most comprehensive and lucidly written text, profusely and adequately illustrated, rather unwieldy for carrying around, so that students will be deprived of little "on the spot" peeps when they are up against difficulties. But it is a prodigious work deserving the highest admiration.

Its size and high price may prevent it becoming the prized possession of individual Nurses who are taking their Sick Children's or General training—which is a pity, considering the fact that it has been written for Nurses. Perhaps—when the time is ripe for the Sixth edition—much general information could be condensed, or even omitted, which would bring price and size nearer to the capacity of Student Nurses' pockets.

A Thought for the Month.

Plato; Symposium. Translated by Robert Bridges.

WHEN A MAN PROCEEDING ONWARDS from terrestrial things by the right way of loving, once comes to sight of that Beauty, he is not far from his goal. And this is the right way . . . he should begin by loving earthly things for the sake of absolute loveliness, ascending to that as it were by degrees or steps, from the first to the second, and thence to all fair forms; and from fair forms to fair conduct, and from fair conduct to fair principles, until from fair principles he finally arrives at the ultimate principle of all and learns what absolute beauty is.

"This life, my dear Socrates," said Diotima, "if any life at all is worth living, is the life that a man should live, in the contemplation of absolute Beauty."

Great Ormond Street Hospital (informally GOSH or Great Ormond Street, formerly the Hospital for Sick Children) is a children's hospital located in the Bloomsbury area of the London Borough of Camden, and a part of Great Ormond Street Hospital for Children NHS Foundation Trust. The hospital is the largest centre for child heart surgery in the UK and one of the largest centres for heart transplantation in the world. In 1962 they developed the first heart and lung bypass machine for children. With When Great Ormond Street Hospital opened its doors in February 1852, it did so with a clear mission - to treat sick children, research their diseases and develop children's nursing. Yet it was limited by having just 10 beds. So when, within a few months, it had 143 inpatients and 1,250 outpatients, its founders were in no doubt of a desperate need to find new sources of funding that would add to existing donations. Articles and engravings depicting the hospital were soon promoting its work in the national press; and, before the decade was out, photography, then still a novel medium, had b In 1852, Great Ormond Street Hospital (GOSH) opened with just 10 beds, and was the first hospital in the UK to offer dedicated inpatient care to children.
