The Book of the Acts of the Apostles is the cornerstone of Church history. Written by the evangelist Luke as the sequel to his own Gospel, it tells us of the Church's first years, of the initial events in her life. It describes the first Christian community in Jerusalem and its persecution by the Judean authorities, the preaching of the apostles especially that of St. Paul and finally the spread of Christianity from Jerusalem to Rome. The book also contains the first doctrine of the Church, with the facts of her life as illustrations; it therefore includes only facts that are of service to this teaching and vital to its understanding.
