Scotland, in particular, is an outstanding example, where mostly medieval castles can be seen in their full glory, often surrounded by the untamed and rugged Scottish landscape. Many have been famously featured in films and TV shows, and while some are known across the world, others are much more off the beaten path and can be an unexpected surprise. Let's have a look at some of the best castles in Scotland: 1. Eilean Donan Castle. Eilean Donan Castle is perhaps the most widely-recognized Scottish castle. Set in a picturesque highland landscape on a small island which is enclosed by three sea lochs â€“ Loch Alsh, Loch Duich, and Loch Long. Clans have a significant role to play in Scottish history, and Eilean Donan Castle was the stronghold for the Mackenzie and Macrae clans. Historically, the artefact was kept at the now-ruined Scone Abbey in Scone, near Perth, Scotland. It is also known as Jacob's Pillow Stone and the Tanist Stone, and as clach-na-cinneamhain in Scottish Gaelic. One story concerns Fergus, son of Erc, the first King of the Scots in Scotland, whose transport of the Stone from Ireland to Argyll, where he was crowned on it, was recorded[3]. Some versions identify the stone brought by Fergus with the Lia Fáil used at Tara for the High King of Ireland. Other traditions contend the Lia Fáil remains at Tara.[4][5] (Inis Fáil, The Island of Destiny, is one of the traditional names of Ireland.)
